III. READING
Read the passage and circle the best options.

When not working or studying, people need to have fun and to be creative. Many people fill their time off with hobbies or activities based on their interests. Popular hobbies include drawing, collecting baseball cards and building websites. A person with a hobby is called a hobbyist.

Most hobbies involve collecting, creating, observing nature or using special equipment. Many people collect stamps, coins, seashells, jewelry or even action figures. Creative hobbyists enjoy arts and crafts – for example, painting, singing, writing, carving, sewing or building models. Hobbies for people who enjoy nature include bird-watching and gardening. Photography, ham radio (amateur radio) and computer programming are hobbies that require equipment. Many hobbies are done alone, but people often form groups read magazines based on their hobby. No matter what the hobby, there is always an opportunity to learn from it.

Before the 1900s, most people spent nearly all their time working and caring for their families. Only wealthy people could afford to have hobbies. After the Industrial Revolution, modern technology and machines gave people more spare time, so more people developed hobbies. In the late 20th century, computers created a whole new class of hobbies. Many people today spend their spare time surfing the Internet and playing video games.
